The Derby stakes amounted to $32,270, of which Mr. Lorillard gets $20,000.

A little more wisdom and a little less fooling at Albany would soon wind up the fight.

Governor Cornell feels his oats when he gets 20 votes, and it is too good a thing to throw away.

Ex-Senator Brace's only son is named Roscoe Conkling. He hasn't tried to boss his father yet, although he is four years old.

It is estimated, and very wisely, no doubt, that the loss to the farmers of Iowa this year from poor seed will be two million dollars.

Secretary Blaine seems to have dropped out of the controversy at Albany. He is attending to his business, and letting the factions do their own fighting.

About all the vindication Mr. Conkling will get will be from one-third of the Republicans in the Legislature. It is not a very stalwart vindication, but on a par with his deserts.

The Greenback lunatics, of Iowa, are trying to keep up appearances by holding a State convention. They can hold conventions, but they will never elect any more officers in that State.

"It lightens the gloom of the funeral to know that you are remembered in the will," is an old saying; and the so-called stalwarts at Albany have some hope that the senatorial effects will be divided.

The administration men at Albany are not using their force with any creditable ability. They are very much scattered, and there is not any great hope that they will be in any better condition for some time.

Another bogus scheme to promote matrimony, has been planned in Indiana under the name of the mutual marriage benefit association. As open as the scheme is, some of the innocent ones will be taken in.

This may probably be considered a significant straw: Of the 53 Republican members of the Legislature who voted for Platt last winter in the Republican caucus, only 18 give him their support for re-election.

The President has been interviewed regarding the situation at Albany, and the report says he is very much worried in mind over it. Like Conkling, he no doubt wishes his foresight was as good as his hindsight.

The crop reports from the various parts of the Northwest, are very encouraging. The predictions made late in March by the bear-croppers, that there would be a failure of crops in 1881, will not prove true by any means.

It is said that General Grant is "greatly irritated" over the Conkling affair, and thinks the ex-Senator has been shamefully treated. The worst treatment Conkling has had, is the dose he administered himself. He is his own worst enemy.

A cabinet meeting was held on Friday afternoon when the star-route funds were considered. On account of the crowded condition of the courts, Attorney General MacVeagh said the cases could not be taken up before September.

The Wisconsin State temperance conference will be held at Madison, June 13 and 14, the proceedings to take place in the Assembly chamber. A large number of prominent temperance advocates from all parts of the State will be present, and read papers or deliver addresses.

Gorham, whom the country rejoices was not elected Secretary of the Senate, promises to give the country something which will stir the public, and which will help Mr. Conkling. Gorham had better keep on using his time and pen in defense of the star-route swindlers, and not waste any powder on Conkling.

Iroquois did a big business when he won the Derby. Only two foreign horses before Iroquois have won it in the hundred years since the first Derby was run. Those two were the Gladiator, the famous French colt, and Kieber the Hungarian. All the royal family, except the Queen, were present at the race.

Those who are capable of taking a sober view of the situation at Albany will sincerely hope that the present bush-whacking plan of trying to elect two Senators will be abandoned next week. It seems that a sufficient number of cool heads can be found in both factions to control the situation, go into a caucus, nominate candidates, elect them, and go home.

There are a great many precocious boys in this country. They have become orators, readers, business men, singers, actors, and preachers, before they have reached their teens. The latest of the most precocious of American youth that has come to the knowledge of the public, is David Mann, a merchant at Albany, New York. He is extraordinarily shrewd, and is fourteen years old. He considers himself one of the merchants of the town. He attends all the auction sales, and buys whatever he sees money in, from a grand piano to a sugar-cured ham. His transactions are uniformly successful, and his bank account keeps growing. He is too sharp to be beaten by any of the older merchants in that city. He is strictly honest, and is building up a reputation as well as a solid business. A few days ago a prominent newspaper reporter interviewed David, and this is about the language the young merchant used: "I am going to New York on Wednesday night to buy fireworks, and will open a wholesale store in Albany on the 16th of June for their sale. I think if I buy right, I can 'catch 'em' for a couple of hundred dollars by the fourth of July." It has been suggested that while he will never make a statesman he will, like some of the merchant princes and railway magnates, own several of them.

THE EVILS OF ORGANIZED CHARITIES.

The duty of considering the poor is an important one in the large cities of this country, and organized charities have been formed for the ostensible purpose of aiding those who are homeless, brought to misery, unable to aid themselves. There is an immense mass of pauperism in every large city and with the growth of population, the pauperism increases. Those who are rich and have hearts that incline them to do deeds of charity, have gone to work under a certain system to dispense money for the supposed benefit of the poor. They have maintained a regular organization and have employed a large force of clerks, superintendents, and the like. But experience has shown that these organized societies for the suppression of mendicancy, overlook the question of feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, and consider that as to whether the hungry need food or the naked clothing; and by the time the society or association finds out what the poor need the most, all the money in the treasury is gone. But how gone? In this way. Philadelphia has given these organized charities a thorough trial. They had finely furnished room, a large force of clerks and men in authority, and the public was asked to give liberally to the noble charity. The public did give to these "charity officials," and what was the result? Only a few days ago one of these organized charities made a report of its doings. This report shows that the contributions for a stated time, reached $2,750, and $2,245.50 of this amount went to clerks and officers, and $493.50 was given to the poor. This is the practical working of the organized charities in Philadelphia, and the result is not far different from that of other societies of the kind in all the great cities in this country. The poor are not kept from hunger, neither are the naked clothed, but in place of this clerks and officials are given easy positions and good salaries.

We want to reveal some interesting but sad facts in regard to some of these organized charities, that the public may know how near "heaven-born" are the purposes of those who organize themselves into a society for the feeding and clothing of the poor and unfortunate.

One week ago, a young woman was taken before Judge Allison, in Philadelphia on the charge of murdering her newly born babe. Her husband deserted her just before her child was born. A woman, the story goes, almost as poor as she, met her at night, in rags and without money to buy bread. She took her to her own miserable home, gave her something to eat and cleaner rags to wear, kept her for two or three days, and made some clothing for the child. The unfortunate woman was then taken by her poor and sympathizing friend, to one of these "organized charities." It was a wealthy institution, but they would not receive her unless she paid $5.00 and showed her certificate of marriage. She had not a cent to her name and never kept her certificate of marriage. She was taken to another "organized charity," but that would not receive her because she was married. She tried still another great charitable institution, but the doors were closed against her because she had a child. At last a Home mission refused to give her a railway ticket to follow her husband to New York because she could not pay a fee of one dollar.

Driven from place to place by the cold charity of the world, she was overpowered by despair and hunger, and depressed by weakness on a cold day in March, and on that night, wading through the snow with soleshoes and no stockings, her child was born. She then took shelter in a garret, and on the following morning her babe was found dead on the roof of a shed. Not until the child was found dead, did society take any notice of her, and then it was to brand her as a murderer, and instead of taking her to a hospital for sympathy and treatment, she was dragged to prison.

But there happened to be men of souls on the jury, and without leaving the box they returned a verdict of not guilty. The woman who did the most to save Lizzie Aaronson from the penitentiary and administered more kindness than all the great organized charities in Philadelphia, was a Magdalene of the streets. There is something in the pathetic story of this young woman, by which the organized charities and christian associations in large cities, might learn a valuable lesson.

LONDON, June 4.—It is reported from Tehran that there was a popular uprising which resulted in the massacre of Mian-dob, who was tied to the cannon's mouth and blown to atoms in the presence of the populace.

TROUBLED IN MIND.

President Garfield Seems Worried Over the Fight Between the Factions—Blaine is Accused of Being the Throat.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The President is troubled in mind. A prominent politician who was a Grant man last summer called on him to-day. He says that the President went over the whole subject of the New York controversy. He showed great anxiety over the situation, expressing fears as to the result upon the country at large. He said that he would be held responsible by the party for its disruption from the fact that he was at its head, but he excused himself and laid all the blame upon Mr. Conkling for the quarrel. He claimed that Mr. Blaine did not dictate Robertson's appointment. He dwelt at length on the efforts he had made to conciliate the New York Senator, and seemed utterly bewildered by the danger of the situation. He had no solution of the problem to offer, but seemed to be waiting for something to turn up.

Another prominent public man who was for Sherman for President before the Chicago convention, saw the President yesterday, and reported him in much the same frame of mind. He says, however, the President is more troubled by matters right here than at Albany. He declared that unless Blaine shall leave the cabinet, Garfield's life will be one continued round of sorrows. He does not believe that the President has the courage to say to his premier, even though he realizes it himself thoroughly. He reports that his peace of mind is gone, and he broods over the ruin that has been wrought in his party during his administration.

A third friend reports that he is very much chagrined at the spectacle presented to the country by the administration divided against itself. He feels very bitterly the hostile course of Vice President Arthur, who is at Albany endeavoring to secure re-election of the Senators from New York. He thinks it tends to make ridiculous the executive before the people and condemns his colleague's course vigorously.

FILE HOLDERS.

A Six Hundred Dollar Seal Troubles an Investigating Committee in Washington.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The Star has the following: "The committee investigating the treasury stealings is hard at work way down in the basement of the building. Several new developments have been reached, but the committee is very reticent as to its doings. One of the matters that is being looked into is the mysterious getting away of $600. That amount of money was paid out for file-holders, but no file-holders came in. There is no trace of their ever having been received, and how the money went is what the committee is looking into. It is alleged that it was paid out for campaign printing by one of the Republican candidates for the nomination at Chicago. The committee is very reticent about the matter, and the above story is not generally believed."

THE STAR ROUTE.

Echos from Room 59 in the Treasury Building.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—Room 59 in the post office department is fast acquiring the reputation that surrounded the old hall in which the conclaves of the dreaded Council of Ten were held in Venice. It is occupied by Detective Woolard and Special Agent Gibson, and generally with several ready witnesses against the star route ring. It is here the evidence against the swindlers is discovered and collected for the attorney General, and its walls have heard the majority of the testimony that is to convict a dozen or more prominent men of complicity in these gigantic frauds against the government. Very little of this testimony reaches the public, however, and it is forced to regale itself on what crumbs of rumors fall from room 59. The evidence thus far collected is in the hands of the newly appointed special attorney, W. H. Cook, who is putting it in shape to lay before the grand jury. It is said to be sufficient to secure indictments, and is described as being one of the most damaging kind, and involving some eighteen or twenty persons. It is claimed that, as far as Dorsey is concerned, that the most conclusive evidence against him has been found, given by parties whom he has associated with him in the star-route frauds, but has not dealt with squarely. The ex-senator received all of the original copies of letters and telegrams which were brought as evidence against him in his western suits, but the government is in possession of certified copies that form most exclusive evidence of his complicity in the frauds. These will show the utmost license in securing petitions for expediting star routes. Other strong evidence is produced in the shape of certain notes given for the purchase of a daily paper in this city. Dorsey left the city, ostensibly for his cattle ranch in New Mexico, but rumors are freely circulated here to-day that he was not headed in that direction. The charges recently made in a New York paper against Mr. Blaine are known to have originated with the star route ring, and evidence of this is in the hands of the attorney general.

JEREMIAH RUSK.

LA CROSSE, June 3.—The Black River Falls Independent, the home organ of State Senator William T. Price, of Jackson county, Wisconsin, having made a mischievous statement that General Jeremiah Rusk makes no attempt to conceal his chagrin at his appointment to Paraguay and Uruguay, and last night openly said that President Garfield lied to him when he promised him the position of auditor of railroad accounts, and then going back on it, your correspondent this evening interviewed General Rusk while he was passing La Crosse en route to St. Paul regarding the truthfulness or falsity of the Independent's statements, and was informed by him in the most unqualified terms that the Independent's statements are utterly unfounded and false. The general attributes them wholly to Price's intrigues for personal ends, and expresses the strongest friendship for and confidence in President Garfield and his administration.

OFFICIAL RESIGNATION.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—General Sheridan announces the resignation of Lieutenant Colonel Grant in a general order, in which he says: "The resignation of Lieutenant Colonel Frederick D. Grant, aid-de-camp, of his position as aid upon the staff of the Lieutenant General, to date June 1, 1881, is hereby accepted. In parting with Lieutenant Colonel Grant, after service upon his staff for more than eight years, the Lieutenant General thanks him for the good soldierly qualities shown by him during said period, and most earnestly wishes him every success in the future."

BARNUM'S SNAKES.

BOSTON, June 3.—While Barnum's circus was parading in Salem to-day the six horses attached to the serpent cage ran away and upset the wagon, and for a few minutes there was a lively stampede among the large crowd as the forty reptiles wriggled about on the pavement. The box-constructors and the coolness of the keeper and other employees prevented any accident. In half an hour the reptiles were all gathered up again, and the agent promptly settled for a collision with another team.

RAILWAY MATTERS.

MILWAUKEE, June 3.—C. L. Colby and others, of Milwaukee, to-day sent articles of incorporation to be filed at Madison to-morrow for the organization of the Chippewa Falls and Minneapolis Railroad company. The road is to be built as soon as possible from Chippewa Falls, Wis., to Minneapolis.

At the annual meeting of the Wisconsin and Minnesota Railroad company to-day, C. L. Colby was elected President and Treasurer; E. H. Abbott, Vice President and Secretary, and F. N. Finney, General Manager.

SECRETARY WINDOM.

MILWAUKEE, June 3.—Secretary Windom passed through this city to-day en route for St. Paul, where he goes to take a three weeks' vacation. He is in the best of health, but is tired and worn out, and to all interviewers said that he had nothing to say of interest to anybody.

THE ISLES OF LONG AGO.

O lovely isles so far away
In life's vast surging sea
Around their slopes the sunbeams play
Their silent melody
Above their heights the changing skies
Their lights and shadows throw
As they again before me rise—
The Isles of Long Ago.

O lovely isles, forever fair
And clothed with green they stand!
No change or death can enter there,
In that fair summer land.
Where happy birds, in shady bowers,
Sing with the brooklet's flow,
And myrtle deck, and fadest flowers,
The Isles of Long Ago.

I've sailed out on the sea of life,
Far from their pebbly strand,
Yet often through the din and strife
I see that summer land.
The ocean surges round it there:
With ceaseless ebb and flow;
So grand and pure and deathless fair—
The Isles of Long Ago.

Time, when life's mighty tide moves on,
Stands over at the helm,
To guide our quicksands and through storm
Safe to a higher realm:
There, standing on the hills of light,
To view the scene below,
I'll see them with a clearer sight—
The Isles of Long Ago.

Far from the ceaseless rush and roar
Of life's vast, surging sea,
They stand in light forever more
In God's eternity.
There, in that blessed land of truth,
No death or change to know,
I'll walk again the ways of youth,
The Isles of Long Ago.

MISS DARCY'S EASTER BONNET.

It was a raw, misty evening in early April. Hugh Merrick buttoned his overcoat a little closer, as he came out of his office and started on his walk up town. The keen wind and sharp sleet made him shiver, but he pulled his hat lower over his eyes and walked on resolutely, deciding not to take a car, though the fog and rain were a nuisance. A long day of hard work in his business, with perplexing cares in addition, not of a business nature, made the sharp air a relief to him, and the thought of a stuffy car was repellant. Turning into Fifth avenue, at length, a furious blast of wind and sleet nearly blinded him for a moment, and he stumbled against a child, coming from the opposite direction. He was hurrying past, when the sound of suppressed sobs fell on his ear, and he half stopped, with an impatient exclamation.

"Did I hurt you?" he asked, scarcely giving her a glance.
"Oh! no. Not you," said the child.
"Well, what is it? Cold, are you? Why don't you run home? This is no time for begging." And this time he looked at her, to see if he had guessed correctly. But the honest blue eyes that looked up to him frankly asked nothing.

Hugh Merrick had a weakness for blue eyes, and he felt rebuked when she answered:

"I'm not begging, sir; but just see this." She held up to view a pasteboard box, crushed and broken and stained with mud.

"How did it happen?" asked the gentleman, compassionately.

"I was crossing the street, and the box got knocked out of my hand; and while I was trying to pick it up a man grabbed me right up out of the way of an omnibus and the wheels went right over this. And it's all spoiled, I know, and it cost fifteen dollars. And I had the bill in my hand, and I don't know what's become of it."

At the end of this tale of woe the tears burst forth again. She was a small, thin child, about ten years old, with fair hair falling out of an old blue hood. Fair hair and blue eyes. The most beautiful combination in the world Hugh Merrick was wont to think, and the thought made him wonderfully soft-hearted just now.

"Don't cry," he said, compassionately. "Where were you going to take the box?"

"That's just what I don't know," said the child. "The address was on the bill; but I didn't want to get it wet, so I held it under my shawl and hadn't looked at it yet. 'Twas for some lady on Fifth Avenue."

"Highly definite. A bonnet, I presume. Well, come with me. I am almost home, and we'll investigate this smash-up and see what the damage is."

And then, somehow, though he had never meant it in the least, her little wet hand was clasped in his warmly, and she was trotting up by his side, looking up into his face with grateful confidence. A few more steps brought them to his comfortable bachelor residence. He opened the door with his latch-key, and took the little way-farer into the library, where she was soon tossing her feet before the grate. "And now let me see," handling gingerly the crushed pasteboard box. "I mustn't add to the damage. So suppose you open it." She laughed shyly, took it from him, and managed to extricate the bonnet, giving utterance to a cry of dismay as she saw it was woefully crushed out of shape.

"I knew it was spoiled!" she wailed. "And I'll get turned out of my place, and maybe they'll make me pay for it. Oh! what shall I do?"

Hugh Merrick's eyes were fixed on the bonnet. Blue was his favorite color in bonnets, as well as in eyes; but there was something in this dainty bit of millinery that sent a pang through his heart. It reminded him of some one. He could imagine just how it would rest above those waves of gleaming gold, just how those strings would nestle around a white throat and under a soft rounded chin. That feather was intended to fall on the massive braid at the back. Ruined, was it? To him it was beautiful and perfect. He roused himself with a start.

"I don't know much about such things," he said, cheerfully; "but there doesn't appear to be much the matter with it."

"Oh, don't you see?" she said, starting up. "This side is all punched in and the lace is torn; the feather is broken, too. No lady would ever think of wearing it. And it cost fifteen dollars."

The big tears welled up into the blue eyes. It is a pitiful thing to see a look of despair in a child's face. So thought Hugh Merrick, and again said, hastily: "Don't cry. Perhaps I can fix it. If we only knew the lady's name. Couldn't you go back to the store and ask?"

"Oh, an Easter bonnet!" said Mr. Merrick, slowly. "And it's worth fifteen dollars? Well, as long as it is bought, it doesn't matter who the purchaser is, I suppose. I'll take the bonnet."

"You!" and the child's face was radiant with joyful relief. Then she added, doubtfully: "But you can't wear it, sir."

"No, I suppose not, even at Easter. But my sister may be able to fix it up and make it quite respectable."

O hypocrite! You know you never mean to let your sister know what a fool you have made of yourself. Throwing away fifteen dollars to gratify a whim! To own a bonnet that might have adorned the head of a woman you do not intend to marry! The child's eager eyes seemed to confront him with his folly. He hastily put the money into an envelope, sealed it, and handed it to the little errand girl. "There, tell your mistress the truth, and don't try to conceal anything; because, just think of the agony of the unknown lady, if her bonnet doesn't arrive in time for Easter. Good-bye."

He did not ask her name, nor give her his answer to her grateful petition. He felt as if she must be laughing at him inwardly, and he wished to get rid of her and never to see her again—the one witness of his lunacy. The little girl, Mollie Burke, hastened back to the milliner; but her heart failed her as she came in sight of the forewoman's sharp countenance, a very Miss Kwag's for acidity. She handed up the envelope, without a word.

"Where's the bill, child?"

"She didn't send any," faltered Mollie.

The forewoman uttered an impatient exclamation. "Some people are the carelessst!" Then, turning to the book-keeper: "Miss Green, you'll have to make out a new bill and send it, receipted, to Miss Darcy."

Mollie heard the name, and wished she could have told her benefactor, who, perhaps, might know the lady. Meanwhile, Mr. Merrick had locked his library door, placed the bonnet upon his table, and established himself in his easy-chair directly in front of it. His eyes were fixed on his purchase, but his thoughts were a mile away. Yes, it was just about a mile from his house to the home of Agnes; and it was two weeks since he had ascended that long flight of steps or seen Agnes' face at the window. Two weeks! Two years, rather, it seemed to him. Why, three months ago he had thought himself the happiest man that ever walked the streets of New York. The most beautiful woman in the world, the only perfect one, belonged to him. And now a few hours, angry words had parted them forever. What had they quarreled about? He could scarcely remember.

But he had been jealous, and she had resented it. She had said she would never see him again, and he must abide by her word. With his steady gray eyes fixed sternly on the coquettish bonnet, he remained for nearly an hour lost in reverie, until his sister called him to supper. Then he came out of the library, looking the door behind him.

"What have you got locked up in there?" demanded the gray little lady who presided over his bachelor establishment.

"Oh! my papers are lying all about, and I don't want things disturbed," replied Mr. Merrick.

The next day Mr. Merrick looked up his purchase before going to business; but the following morning he was called away suddenly, and went out leaving the bonnet in full view on the table.

He had been in his office two hours before he remembered that the key of the library was in the door, and not in his pocket. About an hour after his departure, his sister Ethel, entering the room, with a gay song on her lips, stopped short in astonishment, and the time died abruptly.

"A lady's bonnet! Hugh Merrick! Agnes Darcy was quite right to break off the engagement. Where did the wretch get it?"

Approaching the table, she lifted the damaged article and scrutinized it carefully.

"Well, I never! Can it be her bonnet? That is certainly her turquoise buckle that she wore all last winter. The mystery grows! How did Hugh get possession of this?"

At the very time that Ethel Merrick was puzzling her brain over Miss Darcy's Easter bonnet, in a daintily-furnished boudoir, a little further up the avenue, a sweet-faced girl was knitting her brows over another phase of the same mystery. Robed in a morning wrapper of palest blue, tastefully becoming to her rosy complexion and soft gold locks, she sat before her Davenport, looking with the most puzzled expression at a slip of paper in her hand.

"Aunt Helen! Come here a minute, please." Then, as a portly lady in walking-dress appeared in the doorway, she held out the sheet to her. "See that receipt from Mrs. Clare for my Easter bonnet?"

"I did not know that your bonnet had come," said Mrs. Darcy, as she glanced at the receipt.

"This is the funniest part of it. The bonnet has not come, and I have certainly never paid for it; and yet here is the receipt. What can it mean?"

"Shall I stop at Clare's and see about it?" asked Mrs. Darcy, unable to solve the mystery.

"If you have time; but don't do it unless it is perfectly convenient. My old bonnet will do perfectly well for next Sunday." And a cloud came over the lovely face.

"You seem to care about anything, Agnes, since you quarreled with Hugh Merrick. I thought you had more pride. Perhaps you will make it all up again before Sunday, and then you will wish you had your bonnet."

"Don't speak of that, please, Aunt Helen." And Miss Darcy's voice was decided, though sweet. "I do not expect to renew my engagement with Mr. Merrick. He has doubted me." And tears rose to the blue eyes and Miss Darcy had to swallow a lump in her throat, as she turned away.

"Miss Merrick to see you, Miss Agnes," said a maid at the door.

Agnes received her visitor with some secret trepidation, though outwardly composed.

"I will forgive you, you naughty girl, for breaking my poor brother's heart, on one condition," said Ethel, vivaciously.

"Of course, you know, Ethel," began Miss Darcy, with dignity.

"Never mind. Only let me see your spring bonnet, and we'll be friends."

"I wish I could," said Agnes, somewhat hurt by her friend's levity; "but Madame Clare has just sent me a receipt for a bonnet I have never seen nor paid for."

"How funny!" cried the volatile Ethel. "What's the witchcraft in it? Then come home with me and see mine. Oh! you needn't be afraid. Hugh never comes home in the morning. I'm not plotting against you."

Somewhat against her judgment, Miss Darcy consented, and was soon walking along the avenue with her friend; but when they had entered the house, and Ethel led the way to the library, Agnes drew back.

"No, Ethel, I have no wish to enter your brother's room."

"But you must, my dear, or you can't see my bonnet." And Ethel whirled her faintly-resisting companion into the library, and exclaimed, triumphantly: "There! Isn't it a beauty? Somewhat crushed, you perceive; but easily set to rights. Never saw me in a blue bonnet before," rattled on the merry little brunette. But Miss Darcy stood motionless.

"Ethel Merrick, that is my bonnet! How came it here?"

"You know as much as I do, my dear. I discovered it this morning. Has Hugh stolen it out of malice, to prevent you from shining on Easter morning?"

Agnes laughed, in spite of herself; and, taking up the bonnet, was soon trying it on before the mirror in the hall.

"Is it becoming?" she asked, turning with a mischievous face, to her friend.

"A sudden sound of a key turning in the front door caused Ethel, who had a keen relish for 'situations,' to beat a hasty retreat; and Miss Darcy turned, with a startled face, to meet Mr. Merrick, who was the image of consternation.

"Agnes!"

"I came for my bonnet, Mr. Merrick," she replied, enjoying his discomfiture.

"The bonnet belongs to me. I paid for it," he retorted.

"But the receipt is made out in my name, she said, drawing it from her pocket. 'You cannot prove that you paid for it. I am at a loss to know how you came by it.'"

"Never mind how I found it. Agnes, I must implore your forgiveness for my unjust suspicions. I have tormented myself ever since we parted for—"

"Let us settle about the bonnet, first," interrupted Miss Darcy, the sea-shell tints of her cheek taking a deeper pink.

"Don't trifle with me, Agnes," but, seeing the willful mutine look on her face, he changed his tone. "You know that you did not pay for it. By the right of purchase it belongs to me."

"But I ordered it, and I want it."

"So do I!" decidedly.

"One of us must yield," said Agnes, pointing. "I need the bonnet."

"But you cannot wear it."

"Oh! yes. There is not much harm done. I can repair the damage easily."

"Well, I thank you for giving me the privilege of paying for your bonnet," he said, with an amused light in his eyes.

She flashed out: "I will pay you for it, Mr. Merrick."

"You forget that you have the receipt, proving that you have already paid for it. I will give you the bonnet, to go with the receipt."

"What magnanimity!" she said, with a faint laugh and not resisting as he took her two hands in his and looked at her with lighted eyes.

"What will you give me in return, Agnes?"

She looked at him then, her eyes brimming with sudden tears, and said, softly:

"Perhaps I will give you the receipt."

"I declare, Agnes," said Aunt Helen, coming in from her shopping expedition late in the afternoon, "I forgot all about your bonnet; and to-morrow is Saturday! But you said you didn't care."

"Never mind, Aunt Helen, the bonnet has come. And I suppose—Mr. Merrick will be here to dinner on Sunday. Perhaps I shall wear it, after all."

The Cultivation of Roses.

To raise roses in perfection, it is needful to feed them well and place them in the full sunlight, and not where they will be shaded by trees and shrubs. After they have bloomed, prune them closely, and also when they commence to leaf in the early spring. The buds in which they are planted must be made very rich with well-decomposed compost, dug to the depth of at least two feet. In making a rose bed, it is a good plan to take the soil for two or three feet in depth and fill the cavity with good ordure well rotted. Then add six inches or a foot of very rich soil with a mixture of sand. After the plants are set, mulch them with long litter from the stable. This will keep the roots moist and cool during the heated term, and make a healthy growth of branches and flowers.

After the June flowering has passed, all monthly roses should be severely pruned and the new growth cut back two or three inches; also the old branches should be cut away. The handsomest flowers always spring from fresh growth from the roots; and to make these start vigorously the knife must be freely used. For a few weeks your eyes may seem short of their glory, but soon they will renew their beauty and give you plenty of flowers; while, if you permit the seed buds to grow, it will stop the blossoming in a great degree. Therefore, as each rose fades, cut it off; or better yet, cut it while in its bloom.

From the branches which are pruned new plants can be raised. As a rule, all cuttings should be taken off just below a bud or joint; and they should be selected from young growth, rather than from the old woody branches.

Try to snap the branch. If it bends without breaking it is too old to grow easily; but if it snaps off at once it is in the right condition to strike root quickly. Leave one or two buds above the bottom one, and trim off two more of the lower leaves, as they will wilt easily, and thus injure the cutting.

Clear sand kept very moist is the best soil in which to strike cuttings, and they can be placed in a pot only an inch apart, and put under the shade for a few days. Warmth, an even temperature, and moisture are essential for root-growth. It will take from three to four weeks to develop the roots, and then the plants can be placed in rich soil, with a little sand to lighten it, and soon they will be good, stocky plants.

Table Corn.

With frequent plantings through the season, a dish of boiled green corn can be on the table daily, after the first mess, until late in October. As it is deservedly regarded to be one of the most desirable things that can be enjoyed, there is no reason why even people with a small plot of land should not indulge in it. There is now an early variety of sugar corn for the first planting that we have found to be excellent.

It is called the Extra Early Crosby Sugar. A single planting of this is sufficient to be followed by 'Stowell's Evergreen Sugar,' which is the best variety for the general crop that we have yet found, and have raised it for at least twenty-five years. A planting should take place every ten to twelve days, and the season will require from six to seven crops altogether. The first planting can be put in now, and followed at those periods until frost in the latter part of October. —Germantown Telegraph.

USEFUL AND SUGGESTIVE.

Buns.—A cupful each of milk, sugar and yeast, and flour to make a batter. Let it rise over night, then add half a cupful of melted butter, a cupful of sugar, and flour to knead, after which let it rise again, then roll out and cut into cakes, and let it rise again.

To keep bread moist. Keep a large earthen jar—a cover of the same material is better than a wooden one—and have it well aired and fresh; let the bread be well cooled after it is taken from the oven, and then place in the jar and cover closely. It will keep moist and fresh a long time.

A good way to keep the earth moist. In a hanging basket without the trouble of taking it down, is to fill a bottle with water and put in two pieces of yarn, leaving one end outside on the earth. Suspend the bottle just above the basket and allow the water to drip; this will keep the earth moist enough for winter and save a great deal of time and labor.

China and Glass Cement.—To one pint of milk add one pint of vinegar; separate the curds from the whey and mix the whey with the whites of five eggs; beat it well together, stirring into it a sufficient quantity of quicklime to convert it into a thick paste. Broken china or glass mended with this cement will not again separate and will resist the action of fire and water.

French Cakes.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of milk, three cups of flour, three eggs, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, one cup chopped raisins. Beat butter and sugar to a cream; add the eggs well beaten, dissolve the soda in the milk, and mix the cream with the flour; add raisins and spice to taste; bake in rather a quick oven.

In packing eggs away in lime. The lime may be prepared in any convenient way, but it should be at least as thick as whitewash that is used for walls; that is, as white as milk, and somewhat thicker. This is called cream of lime, and not lime water. The fresher the eggs the better they are kept. On a bad egg will spoil a whole package, so that care should be taken to have only fresh ones. The lime will not eat the shell, for the shell is lime. Half barrels, pails, jars or anything that will hold water, will serve to hold the eggs. Any kind of lime will do.

Periodical Ophthalmia, or Moon Blindness.—This disease, to which horses are subject, is caused by constitutional disposition, or by the pungent vapors which fill the air of unclean stables. It appears as a bluish cloud in the center of the eye, the cornea, which gradually thickens, and an increasing inflammation of the whole organ until the horse is unable to see, when the inflammation is resolved into free discharge, the film disappears, and temporary relief is obtained for three or four weeks more. Each attack is worse than the preceding one, until a cataract is formed and permanent blindness occurs. The treatment is to remove the causes, to avoid any irritating circumstances, to give a full dose of salts, twelve to sixteen ounces, (two ounces doses are useless, as when the fever is relieved to maintain good health by the best of feeding, not using much corn, but more bran and linseed, and by strengthening the eyes by cold bathing and the occasional use of a lotion of one grain of sulphate of zinc in one ounce of rain-water, a little of which should be put into the eyes.—N. Y. Times.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

The following statement of William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we feel to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the fall of 1876, I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I laughed at my friends, thinking that my case was incurable, but I took a bottle and found that when I took my first dose of the medicine, I felt better. I continued to take it, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a second bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a third bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a fourth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a fifth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a sixth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a seventh bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took an eighth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a ninth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a tenth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took an eleventh bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a twelfth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a thirteenth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a fourteenth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a fifteenth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up. I took a sixteenth bottle, and in a few days I was able to get up.
